To Whom it May Concern:

My husband and I were hesitant to take on a project of this magnitude since we had never done anything like it before. We purchased a one-hundred year old stone house in need of renovation on Canoe Hill Road in New Canaan, Connecticut. With over 15 acres of property, it was extremely important for us to consider the natural landscape in the overall project. A friend recommended we consult with Wadia and Associates for the large project. We had a wonderful first conversation with Dinyar and it was immediately evident he and his team were the right people for the job.

From initial concept meetings to final design decisions, we knew we were in good hands with a firm that was experienced and understood that this was to be our family's casual yet elegant home but not a showcase house.

Dinyar was extremely patient and understanding and helped us move through the process with ease and confidence. He often accompanied us to the various outlets to pick finishes since we valued his experience and opinion.

Peter Ferraro was our diligent project manager who tightly managed the almost three-year project. He was on site six days a week and kept close tabs on the many subcontractors working here. We had full confidence in Peter helping to construct an extremely well-built home with an eye on the bottom line and attention to all details.

Eileen, Dinyar's assistant, was a pleasure to communicate with and could always help us find who or what we needed in the office. We worked a lot with Bill Hine, an architect in the office, who was extremely responsive and also understood our family's needs. He was always available by phone or email to answer a question or two (or three!)

What began as a business relationship several years ago has developed into one closer to that of friends and family. We would wholeheartedly recommend Dinyar and his team for any scale project. They were the right group of people to maintain the integrity of the hundred plus year old house while updating it to meet the needs of our family.

Sincerely,
